Sports nutrition products are sold at big-box retailers, drugstores, and even grocery stores.

However, many conventional sports nutrition products, especially the most popular retail brands, contain artificial flavors, sweeteners, and preservatives. Conventional sports products may be untested or they may contain ingredients that are unproven.

Rather than testing products in clinical tests or with world-class athletes, many companies choose to introduce new products without scientific substantiation. Additionally, ingredients that can provide important benefits may be missing from some products. It doesn't make sense to put unproven or untested ingredients in your body at the same time you are asking your body to deliver maximum effort and optimal performance. Ready to order?
